

Habitat Williamson-Maury Board Member

Chad Hall

Professionally, Chad is a Managing Director at CBRE within the Global Workplace Solutions line of business. In this role, Chad leads a diverse team that delivers real estate and facility services aimed at large corporations with multi-national and global real estate footprints. Providing these services to corporate occupiers includes a suite of services - that include strategy, portfolio planning, analytics, real estate transaction services, construction project management and facility operations. Chad began his career at CBRE in 2007 after 8 years in commercial construction.

A hands-on, inquisitive, 'willing to give it a try' nature were traits that led Chad at an early age to be intrigued by the built environment. Those same traits keep Chad in the field today but with more time spent developing and building people, teams and strategy - to ultimately influence the built environment.

Following the devastation of Hurricane Katrina in 2005, Chad participated in a one-week blitz-build of a house in Pearlinton, Mississippi with his church, Brentwood Baptist, and was awakened to the possibilities that exist in combining personal interest, professional career and biblical principles of giving to those less fortunate. So, after multiple team builds with Habitat for Humanity and understanding their mission, it seemed that serving as a board member would once again align with those same three areas: personal interest, professional career and biblical stewardship.

A native Nashvillian, Chad is married to Melaney and they have three kids, Bella (15), Camden (12) and Jones (9). As a resident of Williamson County, Chad is passionate about the quality of life that Williamson County provides and as a member of the business community would like to help ensure that quality of life is available to as many families as possible.
